The story is about two astronauts, Ryan Stones (Sandra Bullock) and Matt Kowalski (George Clooney) which are helpless in the space and try to go back to earth.

At the beginning of the movie there are five astronauts who repair their space shuttle. But than debris destroys it and Ryan and Stones are the only ones who were still alive after that. They are flying helpless across the space in hope to find a way back home on earth. Their plan is to find the next station and from there go to earth.

Now the adventure is beginning. They have nothing to eat and it's very hard to move in the space.

I think this movie is very exciting and sometimes also sad. You don't know what will happen next and that's the exciting thing. The movie is so emotional and it's a different kind of movie because it's in space and not on earth.
